

Migrant Futures Doctoral Studentships - Guidance for Applicants

For awards starting Autumn 2026

The following guidance sets out the categories of information required to apply for Migrant Futures Doctoral Studentships, along with some additional information on the process of selection. It is important that all applications are submitted and complete by the deadline stated.

In order to be considered for an award you must first have applied for and been accepted on to a place to study for an MPhil/PhD at Goldsmiths: eligible applicants from all subject areas available at Goldsmiths will be considered. We strongly encourage and recommend that you discuss your application with your supervisors prior to commencing your application.

What is available?

Two doctoral studentships for entry in 2026-27. These are fully-funded studentship that may be held on a full-time (FT) or part-time (PT) basis, pro-rata, over three years (FT) and six years (PT) and are at an equivalent rate to fully-funded UKRI studentships. They cover tuition fees and an annual stipend at the yearly UKRI rate (the current full-time UKRI rate, i.e. for 2025/26 entrants, is £22,780), together with a small annual research training and support fund.

The Migrant Futures Institute is offering two studentships:

One of the two awards for entry 2026-27 will be open to eligible home applicants who identify as migrants or refugees and from racialised ethnic minority backgrounds in any field of research and practice for which supervision is available at Goldsmiths, University of London. To be clear, applicants considered for this award need not be working on a migration related topic, but they should be able to describe how their work will enhance their own and others economic, creative and intellectual lives.

The second of these two awards will be open to all eligible home or international applicants - irrespective of background and experience - whose proposed PhD is focused on a topic related to migration, broadly conceived, including in relation to processes of race and racialisation. Proposals must be informed by the co-production of knowledge with people and groups from migrant and refugee backgrounds, and demonstrate potential for social and cultural impact.

Migrant Futures Doctoral Studentship holders will be Fellows of the Migrant Futures Institute and will be expected to contribute to developing and enhancing the research culture of the institute through their research, creative practice and participation in MFI activities and events. Successful applicants from racialised backgrounds will also be invited to participate in the activities of Generation Delta Goldsmiths.

Year of entry

2026 (Autumn)

Eligibility criteria

Applicants must be new or continuing doctoral students who will not have completed more than 1 year of full-time or 2 years of part-time registration by the start of the 2026-27 academic year.

Migrant Futures Doctoral Studentships are open to home and international applicants: at least one award will be made to a home applicant with migrant or refugee experiences and from a racialised ethnic minority background.

Application deadlines

17:00 on Friday, 27 March, 2026

How to apply

Applications will be made through the Goldsmiths Graduate School via Gecko form.

We will be holding an applicant information webinar via MSTeams in February 2026. Details of the date and the link will be made available via <https://www.gold.ac.uk/fees-funding/scholarships/migrant-futures-studentships/>

For those unable to attend, a recording of the applicant information session will be made available after February 2026 via the above webpage.

You are advised either to attend or review the recording and to read through the following carefully that outlines what is required in the application form. Please note - your answers cannot be saved on this form and submitted at a later date. Therefore it is advised that you prepare and save the text for each section of your application (requested in sections 2 and 3) in a Word document or similar before you start this application:
